

MANY doctors contend that the bite of a dog will often cause hydrophobia, whether the canine be made or not. It is better not to get bitten by a dog at all.

The Centennial Exhibition is already beginning to bear its fruits in Pennsylvania at least. The managers of its Museum of Industrial Art obtained out of the Exhibition a great number of the best specimens of artistic workmanship in pottery, metal work, jewelry, bronzes, glassware, furniture, carving and textile fabrics. These objects will be kept as models for the instruction of mechanics, and a school of design and drawing for the instruction of common school teachers are to be maintained in connection with the museum. The next step, of course, will be the introduction of drawing into the public schools, and Governor Hartranft has had this topic presented to the Legislature by Professor Walter Smith, of Boston. Indeed the Pennsylvania movement is in the direction taken by the Massachusetts School of Technology, which has been remarkably successful, and is already beginning to create an enthusiasm for the mechanic arts and their improvement. It should be remembered, however, that even Massachusetts and Pennsylvania are twenty years behind France in this species of training, for which most States have made no provision whatever. The line of the new education runs this way, and the Boston school which teaches youth how to use a file and vise, is a pioneer that should be followed by every Commonwealth.

An Opinion of Texas.
WHAT RECENTLY RETURNED MEN THINK OF TEXAS—THEIR OPINION ON OTHER SUBJECTS.

The Pottsville Evening Chronicle publishes the following, which will be read with interest by those who have the "Texas fever."

A representative of the Chronicle called upon Messrs. John McCullough and John Cushman, of St. Clair, two of the recently returned Texan emigrants, so as to give our readers the appearance of this new focus of emigration, as related by two trustworthy gentlemen, who had no interest in the sale of corner lots in an, as yet, unexplained wilderness. Both gentlemen agreed that it was as fine a country as they ever saw and perfectly level. They visited Gaudin county and staid there a few weeks. Water is very scarce, and they travelled forty miles inland without being able to obtain a glimpse of a spring. The only thing raised there is corn, cotton and sweet potatoes. The houses are few and far between, and merely consist of a few logs placed above each other, with roofs made of cow hides. The articles of furniture are of the most primitive kind, and even the wealthiest in that district do not, comparatively speaking, lead the life of a dog. Cows and horses are very plentiful, but the cows give no milk and the horses are merely bonyard signs. If a man works for the railroad company he is obliged to take "putta-percha money" for his wages, and this money is of no use except along the line of the railroad. By this means many persons are compelled to remain there. The company troubles its rates for the return passage, the agents of the companies in this State hold out very great inducements and make golden promises to the emigrants, which are immediately broken when they once get them in their clutches. They tell them that they can get $35 per month and board from farmers, while in reality they receive but $12 and $15 per month, and even this small amount depends on a contingency, for if the crops fail the hired man fail to receive his money. If a person accepts work from a farmer and cannot agree with him after the first month, he does not receive any remuneration for his labors until the end of the season. There is no more grass there than is to be found on one of our streets, and corn fodder for the horse is sold at 5 cents per pound. The court house and jail of Saragin, the county town of Garrettsburg county, are built of mud, and houses of the aristocracy are not as handsome as a twenty-seventh-class stable in Solvaykill county. Taking all the facts of the case into consideration, this country, with its low wages and hard times, is at any time preferable to this new Eldorado, and this is the opinion of every one who has visited that place. The companies agents to the contrary notwithstanding, "Distance lends enchantment to the view," and never did it apply better than to the case of Texas.
